Putting a rug on the floor quickly and accurately is really an easy job. Extension specialists say that by using some simple tips from the National Institute of Rug Cleaning, two people can easily lay a rug and pad at the same time without the task of removing the furniture from the room.

The recommended procedure is:

Decide at which end of the room you want to begin. Usually it is simpler to start unrolling from the end with the least furniture.

Clear starting end, except for large furniture. Remove fragile things from remaining pieces.

Center padding roll at starting end of the room, checking margins carefully. Unroll pad several feet.

Center rug on top of pad. Rug should overlap end of pad about one inch.

Start unrolling pad and unroll the rug right behind it. Keep pad and rug smooth at all times. Watch the alignment of rug with floor margins and pad, taking care that the pad is always covered on both sides.

Unroll to the first large piece of furniture. While one person lifts one end of furniture, second person unrolls pad and rug under the lifted end. Repeat with other end of furniture.

Shift light furniture to end of room which has been covered. Move out large pieces of furniture slightly from the wall, and tip backwards on rear legs while rug and pad are slid under raised front legs.

Pads which extend slightly beyond the unrolled rug may be cut off with scissors. The edges will not unravel and the pad is not damaged by trimming.
